

Today saw us play our first match and what a great experience it was. The day started off with a light training session in the morning and then a relaxing afternoon as we awaited kickoff under the lights. The 12 bulbs that lit the Central American field were adequate enough to provide for a neat atmosphere as we took on San Carlos' 92s.

The game started nervous for us but after 20 or so minutes we settled in. We created 3 great chances to score in the first half but just came up a bit short. The second half saw us play some pretty good soccer and take more control of the match but as can be in soccer, San Carlos scored against the run of play. Their #10 hit a rocket of shot that our goalkeeper just barely missed from keeping out of the net. The game ended with us losing 1-0 but a great experience for our kids--this is what they came for!

We are off to take a canopy tour tomorrow morning (not what they came for but something I am sure they will remember) and then head back to San Jose.
